Chablis 1er Cru Fourchaume L'Homme Mort 2015

The 2015 Chablis 1er Cru l'Homme Mort comes from 35-year-old vines and sees 15 months in 75% stainless steel and 25% wooden barrels. It has a complex and engaging bouquet, with subtle wax and honeysuckle aromas that combine neatly with the cold stone/flint scents. The palate is well balanced with a fine thread of acidity that counterbalances the viscous texture. It is a typical 2015 Chablis: quite rich and opulent and eschewing mineralité for depth and extravagance, and to be honest, it does that with some panache.

Chablis 2015

The 2015 Chablis Villages, matured for 14 months in stainless steel, has a detailed, wet-stone bouquet that unfolds nicely in the glass. The palate is well balanced, with crisp acidity, fine tension and admirable sappiness that keeps the taste buds salivating. I like the uncompromising nature of this Chablis village. This really is quite superb for a village cru.

Petit Chablis 2015

The 2015 Petit Chablis, matured for nine months in stainless steel, has a tightly wound hazelnut-tinged bouquet that opens nicely in the glass. The palate is fresh on the entry with a taut saline note that keeps this serious. It's not a Petit Chablis with wide appeal, but I for one appreciate its typicité and stubbornness.
